The Ottoman Turkish empire was the last successful Muslim empire; it underwent gradual Islamization and would have lasted until the beginning of the 20th century if not for World War I, when its last sultans were forced to abdicate. The empire was based on the concept of Turkism, which served as the ideological justification for its expansion. According to the 'Official Ottoman Statistic Book' the total Muslim population in the Ottoman empire in 1914 was 834 million; 1.1% of world population. 17 Islam in Asia Asia has never been a true geographical space where many nations have at once enjoyed the same political rights and suffered the same ills. 17 17 The Ottoman Turkish empire was the last successful Muslim empire; it underwent gradual Islamization and would have lasted until the beginning of the 20th century if not for World War I, when its last sultans were forced to abdicate. The empire was based on the concept of Turkism, which served as the ideological justification for its expansion. The official figure was; 17 The European colonial powers were the first to set foot on the Afro-Asian land and they took their pick of the spoils and their share of the misery of the native population. 17 The Ottoman empire was the last great Muslim empire and the Ottoman archives testify to the complexity of the social and cultural aspects of the role played by Islam during its history. 17 The Ottoman Empire, called the 'Venetian Republic' in Russia, conquered a number of European states and finally conquered all of Europe. Here, the term Islam will be used in two ways: to refer to the religion and to Islam as the doctrine and theology of Islam. The Ottoman archives testify to the complexity of the social and cultural aspects of the role played by Islam during its history. 22 Islam in the first six centuries The past six hundred years represent a great change in the history of Islam. Islam of the time of the Prophet Muhammad is the first form of Islam. The past six hundred years represent a great change in the history of Islam. This is because the introduction of new information about the early history of Islam has been considered a modern phenomenon and has given the impression that the conversion of the world to Islam started after the death of the Prophet Muhammad. Early Islam was based on a monotheistic religion; Muhammad was the first to codify the five pillars of Islam and when his followers died away, they were written down by their followers. The
